Killed by a Kiss.
Miss Nan Bryant, a pretty girl of Graniteville, S. C., died at a hospital in Atlanta, Ga., in consequence of having been kissed with undue force by her lover, Theodore Barton. Miss Bryant and Barton went walking, and when she returned her cheek was bleeding. She said that she had scratched a plumbe, blood poison developed, and she was taken to Atlanta for treatment. Then the girl confessed that the wound was inflicted by her lover while he was kissing her. "Theodore kissed me," said the girl, "and once playfully bit my cheek. He bit harder than he intended and caused the wound."

HOCKING VALLEY

TRAINED NURSE VISITING HOMES OF NEW YORK PUBLIC SCHOOL PUPILS.

The public schools of New York, especially on the east side, do not consider their care of the children at an end when the daily sessions are over, but try to look after their welfare at home as well. Trained nurses are sent to the homes of sick pupils, and doctors are provided when needed. Recently a small riot was caused on the east side by the action of the school authorities in having a surgeon operate in the school buildings on children afflicted with adenoids, a growth in the nasal passages. It was rumored in the streets that the children were having their throats cut, and parents, mostly Russian Jews, made runs on three or four schools, necessitating the calling out of police reserves.

GOES ALOFT FEET FIRST

Farmer Caught by Balloon Rope and Yanked Into Space at Reading (Pa.) Fair.

SAVED BY "SKINNING CAT."

Swinging Up and Grasping Line With His Hands, Victim of Odd Accident Draws Himself to Safety.

Jacob Gehring of Hammelstown, Pa., a farmer, went to Reading and secured a job as laborer at the fair grounds. When La Rue, the aeronaut, began his preparations, Gehring took up a position near the big gas bag. With head in the air and hands in his pockets Gehring stood gazing without noticing that his feet were among a coil of ropes. The word was given and the balloon, with La Rue performing upon a trapeze, shot skyward. With it went a shriek of horror from the crowd, for behind the eyes of that same man a man crawling from the end of an air rope that had turned about his feet.

La Rue, charged to his involuntary passenger to swing himself upward and catch the rope above his feet with his hands. This Gehring succeeded in doing after several unsuccessful attempts, during which it seemed that any moment he might be dashed head first to death from a rapidly increasing height. Just as Gehring caught the rope with his hands a gust of wind caught the balloon and he was swung far out. At the terrible sight women in the crowd below fainted.

The balloon was whipped from side to side by the gale in which it had been caught. Finally when a height of 1,000 feet above the fair grounds had been reached Gehring, breathless and bleeding from torn hands, dragged himself to the side of La Rue, who was sitting on the cushion suspended from the balloon. A shout that went up from the crowd was answered by the waving of two pairs of hands up among the clouds. La Rue slipped into his cannon, astride which Gehring sat, and was shot into space, floating to earth with a parachute.

CAESAR AND CLEOPATRA.

The Forbes Robertson and Their Portrayal of These Characters.
Shakespeare wrote a play about "Antony and Cleopatra," but it remained for George Bernard Shaw, the English playwright who has had the hardihood to criticize the Bard of Avon, to write a drama entitled "Caesar and Cleopatra." It is being played at a New York theater by Forbes Robertson, the noted English actor, and his wife, Gertrude Elliott, sister of Maxine Elliott. It is one of the principal subjects of conversation in theatrical circles both on account of the ability shown by Mr. and Mrs. Robertson in the interpretation of the leading roles and because of the unconventional way in which the dramatist has treated the characters.

Forbes Robertson is considered the greatest Hamlet of the English stage.

FORBES ROBERTSON AS CAESAR AND HIS WIFE AS CLEOPATRA.

today. His wife, who made his acquaintance while playing with Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott in England, is a woman of much cleverness and beauty. One of the noted successes of the Forbes Robertsons was "The Light That Failed," in which Mr. Robertson took the part of Kipling's hero, Dick Helder, and his wife that of Maudie. In the play Helder, an illustrator and correspondent, wrote Maudie, an artist, in a studio. That is a place familiar to Mr. Robertson, for he enjoyed quite as a painter before he won fame as an actor. He once pointed for Henry Irving the wedding scene in "Much Ado About Nothing." It contained portraits of all the leading characters.

WORE SNAKE FOR NECKTIE

Absentminded Englishman Creates a Sensation in Hotel Dining Room.

A strange snake story comes to London from Africa which relates to an English visitor to Salisbury. As he entered the dining room of his hotel one morning a friend asked why he wore such a "foul" tie. He returned his friend for his apparent levity, but presently he felt a choking sensation about his throat, and his tie seemed to be getting gradually tighter and tighter. Throwing off his vest, he found that he had put on instead of his tie a pet garter snake which he had caught at the Cape.

MUSIC MAKES BIG CAT MAD

Feline, Excited by Piano Playing, Attacks and Bites Wounds Its Mistress.

A weird minor melody on the piano acted as a "call of the wild" on a giant cat owned by Mrs. Henry Mengel of 200 West Sixty-eighth street, New York city, and, becoming as vicious as a tiger, it attacked every one in the household.

Mrs. Mengel was badly bitten on the arm, face and hip. Her daughter's arm was deeply torn, and Mr. J. C. Goetz, a friend who was visiting the family, was also clawed and bitten. A policeman fired two bullets through the feline, and it struggled ten minutes before expiring.

Mrs. Mengel was playing at the piano one of those low, weird, minor things that are creepy. Mrs. Mengel glanced at the window, and there on the sill, swaying and glaring, was their giant cat, which they had brought from India. As she rose from her chair the cat sprang and buried its fangs in her hip.

As Goetz and Miss Mengel sprang to the assistance of the terrified woman the cat attacked them in turn, biting and scratching until blood was flowing freely from all. Finally Goetz managed to get the woman from the room and locked the cat in. He then went for a policeman, who shot it.

The injured had their wounds cauterized. In the struggle considerable damage was done in the room, and the dresses of the women were torn in shreds.

A Poem for Today

THE MAKING OF MAN
By Algernon Charles Swinburne

UNQUESTIONABLY the greatest living English poet is Algernon Charles Swinburne, who was born in London April 5, 1837. He is descended on both sides from the aristocracy and was educated in France and at Eton and Oxford. He lived for some time in Florence with the aged poet Walter Savage Landor. Swinburne has been publishing both prose and verse since 1861. Although some of his work has been severely attacked on the ground of morality, he has ably defended himself, and his complete mastery of poetic form is admitted. He is the only survivor of the brilliant circle that included the Tennysons, the Brownings, the Rossettis, etc.

BEFORE the beginning of years
There came to the making of man
Time, with a gift of tears:
Grief, with a glass that ran;
Pleasure, with pain for leave;
Summer, with flowers that fell;
Remembrance fallen from heaven
And madness risen from hell,
Strength without hands to smite,
Love that endures for a breath,
Night, the shadow of light,
And life, the shadow of death.

And the high gods took in hand
Fire and the falling of tears
And a measure of sliding sand
From under the feet of the years,
And froth and drift of the sea,
And dust of the laboring earth,
And bodies of things to be
In the houses of death and birth,
And wrought with weeping and laughter
And fashioned with loathing and
love,
With life before and after
And death beneath and above,

For a day and a night and a morrow,
That his strength might endure for
a span,
With travail and heavy sorrow,
The holy spirit of man.

From the winds of the north and the south
They gathered as unto strife:
They breathed upon his mouth,
They filled his body with fire,
Eyesight and speech they wrought
For the voice of the soul therein,
A time for labor and thought,
A time to serve and to sin;
They gave him light in his ways,
And love, and a space for delight,
And beauty, and length of days,
And night, and sleep in the night.

His speech is a burning fire;
With his lips he travails;
In his heart is a blank desire,
In his eyes foreknowledge of death:
He weaves and is clothed with devotion;
Sower, and he shall not reap;
His life is a watch or a vision
Between a sleep and a sleep.

DR. LEE DE FOREST.

His Achievements in "Radio-Telegraphy" now if he wishes to be scientific. The term adopted by the recent conference at Berlin on the subject of such communication is "radio-telegraphy." The conference framed an agreement between all the nations represented providing for free communication between the different systems of radio-telegraphy.

Dr. Lee De Forest, the inventor of one of the most widely used of these systems, recently read a paper before the American Institute of Electrical Engineers describing a new wireless receiver of which he is the inventor. It is asserted that this receiver is far more sensitive than any of those invented earlier, and instead of utilizing a liquid it employs a sensitive gas.

Dr. De Forest has been eminently successful in science, but in love he has been less fortunate. He courted his wife by the radio-telegraphic system and, it is said, asked the important question several times by means of the apparatus in his own house and the instruments he set up in the apartment where lived the young lady he admired. She learned to talk by the wireless system, but it was some time before she used it to say "Yes." Their happiness was brief, for a short time ago an application was made for the dissolution of the marriage.

won by Lack of a Neck.

The plaintiff's barrister in the breach of promise case thought he would make life a burden to the unfortunate young man who was the unwilling defendant. "Do you mean to say," he asked, after a number of embarrassing questions, "that after you had been absent for an entire month you did not kiss the plaintiff, to whom you were engaged to be married, when you first saw her on your return?"

"I do," responded the defendant firmly.

"Will you make that statement to the jury?"

"Certainly, if necessary."

"Do you think that they would believe you?"

"One of them would, I know."

"Ah, indeed! And why should he, pray?"

"Because he was present when I first saw her. He was at the gate when I rode up, and she stuck her head out of the second story window, and I said to her, 'How dy'e do?' and called out I'd be back to supper in half an hour."

"Ah, indeed! And every body smiled except the barrister.—T. H. B.

CATARRH PREPARES THE SYSTEM FOR CONSUMPTION

While Catarrh in its first stages usually affects the head, it does not stop there if the trouble is allowed to run on. The contracting of a cold is generally the commencement of the unpleasant symptoms of ringing noises in the ears, nose stopped up, mucus dropping back into the throat, hawking and spitting, etc. The inner skin or mucous membrane of the body becomes inflamed and secretes an unhealthy matter which is absorbed into the blood, and Catarrh becomes a serious and dangerous blood disease. Every day the blood becomes more heavily loaded with these poisonous secretions, and as the poisoned blood constantly passes through the lungs they become diseased, and often Catarrh terminates in Consumption. Sprays, washes, inhalations and such treatment do no real good, because they do not reach the poison-laden blood, where the real trouble lies. The only way to cure Catarrh is to purify and build up the blood. S. S. S. has been proven the remedy best suited for this purpose. It goes down to the very bottom of the trouble and removes every trace of impurity from the circulation, freshens this life stream and, as this healthy blood goes to every nook and corner of the system, Catarrh is driven out and a lasting cure made. The inflamed membranes and tissues heal, the secretions cease, the head is cleared and the entire system renovated and put in good condition by the use of S. S. S. Among Magazines

A WONDERFUL RUSE.

The late A. M. Simpson, the oldest Odd Fellow in the world, had the following experience at a New York theatre several years ago:

In those days women weren't compelled to take their hats off in the theatre. Consequently, a good many kept their hats on, and the people behind saw nothing of the stage. Mr. Simpson sat in his orchestra chair, enjoying the play famously, when a woman in a two-foot hat plumped down in the seat in front of him. He sighed. He sat, so to speak, on tip toe. He craned his neck to the right and to the left. But in vain. Now that this woman had come, he could see nothing of the stage. He saw only two black ostrich plumes, a bunch of grapes, a hummingbird and a bow of pink satin ribbon—from behind this mass the voices of the players came.

Mr. Simpson was a modest man. It was not his nature to disturb any one. Nevertheless, he did not often get to a New York theatre, and now that he was in one, he did not propose to miss its benefits through no fault of his own. So after a good deal of silent suffering and a good deal of bashful hesitation, he leaned forward, touched the woman in front of him, and said in politest tone:

"Madam, will you kindly take off your hat?"

The woman ignored him—ignored him absolutely. He said a little more loudly:

"Will you please take off that big hat, madam? I can see nothing behind it."

She turned, gave him a scornful, wondering look, and settled back into her former position.

"Madam," said Mr. Simpson very firmly, "if you do not remove that hat, something most unpleasant will happen."

She ignored him again.

Mr. Simpson reached down under the seat, got his hat, and put it on. Instantly, from all parts of the house, there came a loud and ferocious chorus:

"Here, take off that hat!"

"Hats off!"

"Hats off—down front!"

"Take off your hat!"

"Off with your hat! Off with it!"

The woman removed her hat instantly. At the same moment, Mr. Simpson, chuckling, removed his own. Then the uproar ceased.—January Lippincott's.

THE FINANCIAL OUTLOOK.

What is to be said of the outlook for American finance? In Wall Street one meets, and has met during the past three or four months, the very general answer that, with the arrival of January, and the relaxing of the money strain, everything will be comfortable again and matters financial will go on under normal pressure. The experience of January, 1936, is forcibly invoked as witness to this probability.

And, in fact there are two concessions freely made, even by people who have shown real concern over the high money rate and the weak bank position of this season. One is that, although stringency is likely to continue longer into the new year than it did twelve months ago, nevertheless the acute strain should relax. The other concession is that our prosperity is so real, our tangible wealth so enormous, and the impetus of a series of prosperous years so great that no serious reverse to our commercial prosperity is to be logically looked for.

That the country has indulged in many excesses is admitted; more grudgingly, it is admitted that such speculative extravagances as have marked the past few years, must in the end bring their own penalty. What people usually rest upon, when in a speculative frame of mind, is the assurance that they are safe for some little time to come. No one will doubt the propriety of such assurances in the case of financial affairs.

The graver consideration concerns the longer future, and arises from the fact of which we have seen no abundant evidence, that credit is being rashly employed, that the precautions of normal years, in banking affairs particularly, are being one after another relaxed, and, in particular, that at the very same time when the automatic warnings of the money market are most sharply sounded, the feeling grows more and more general in the financial community itself that we need no longer heed January-March Forum.

Green Sickness or Chlorosis

Just at the threshold of womanhood, that trying period when the whole system is undergoing a complete change, many a girl falls a victim of chlorosis or green sickness.

Her disposition changes and she becomes morose, despondent and melancholy. The appetite is fickle, digestion is imperfect, and weariness and fatigue are experienced on slight exertion. Chlorosis is much like anemia because it arises from poor quality of blood. Iron and other restoratives and blood builders are combined in Dr. A. W.
